The orchestra had the assistance of a flow voices from the Gratorio Society, the Calvary Choir and the Philamannian of Tarrytown, with a dozen leading singers in the choral finale to Schiller's 'Ode to Joy.' It is a pity that New York is so weak in choral singing. To recall the spiendid achievement of the Mendelssoin Choir of Toronto two years ago, when it combined with the Philabury Greenstra under Emil Paur in a presentation of this work, is to make lest night's effort seem amateurish and insignificant. FLONZALEY QUARTET'S FINE

PLAYING OF WOLF'S WORK. The Florzaley Quartet added much to its stature at Mendelssohn Hall last night by its playing of Hugo Wolf's quartet in D major. The composition is almost unknown in New York. Once the Kneisel Quartet had it in rehearsal, but it was not brought to a public performance. It was written by the composer when he was only nineteen years old, and he was dying in an insent asylum when it was first performed in Vienna. The work, which is full of technical difficulties, is not lacking in structural strength or scheducus charm. It is not easy to comprehen into a simple hearing, and praise must be bestowed principally upon the manner of its rendition.

The other numbers were Boccherin's quartet in A major and Dverak's quartet in A dat major, both played admirably. performance. It was written by the
